

<2024 [26th News] > UOEH organized a training program for the National Institute of Occupational and Environmental Health, Vietnam (Posted on December 13, 2024)

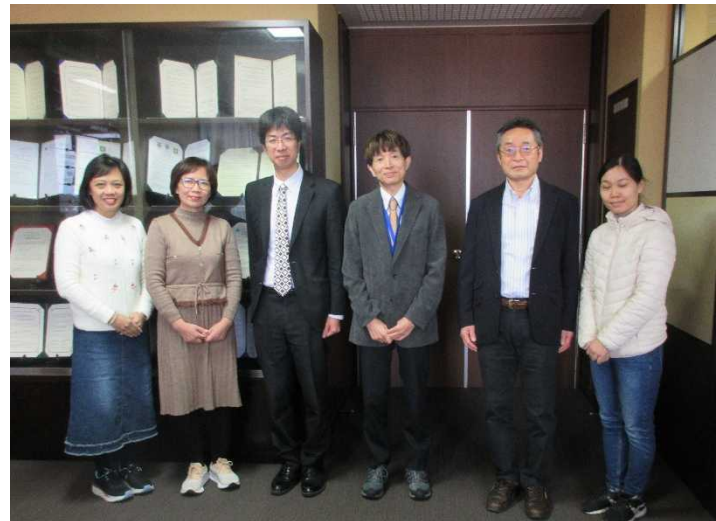

<UOEH organized a training program for the National Institute of Occupational and Environmental Health, Vietnam>

From November 26 to December 1, 2024, UOEH hosted three researchers and technicians in total from the National Institute of Occupational and Environmental Health, Vietnam with whom the Institute of Industrial Ecological Sciences has an MOU. They participated in a training program to learn about the analysis methods of chemicals and metabolites, as well as related research conducted at UOEH.

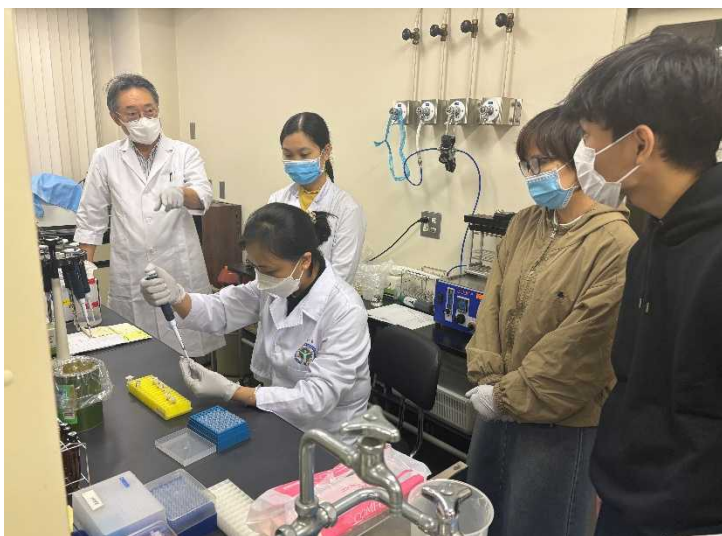

The purpose of this training program was to enable them to effectively utilize the analytical equipment already available at the National Institute of Occupational and Environmental Health, Vietnam and to advance their research in their home country by learning about the analyses and research conducted at our university. During the program, faculty members from the School of Health Sciences and the Institute of Industrial Ecological Sciences provided lectures and practical sessions. The three participants were notably proactive in asking questions related to their work back home.

Introduction of UOEH

Group photograph

From Practical Session

From Lecture