< National University of Singapore and UOEH held Online Residents Conference >

On February 27, occupational health residents of UOEH and School of Public Health, National University of Singapore (NUS-SPH) held an online conference on Occupational Health. This is an exchange program held by part of the implementation of MOU signed between the two universities, and the residents of both universities gave several presentations. From UOEH, Dr. Keiichi Tajima (Dept. of Health Policy and Management) spoke about “Heatstroke”, Dr. Naoki Kawai (Dept. of Occupational Pneumology) presented about “Pulmonary disorders related to cross-linked acrylic acid-based water-soluble polymers” and Dr. Yuta Takagi (Dept. Mental Health) talked on “Association of commuting time and psychological distress; the moderating effects of the commuting intention”. There were vibrant Q&A after each presentation. There were also fun quiz sessions during the conference, which contributed to make the conference quite fruitful.
