Based on the academic exchange agreement concluded in 2007 between the Department of Occupational Hygiene, School of Health Sciences, UOEH and the Department of Occupational Health, Daegu Catholic University, Republic of Korea, four faculty members and nineteen students from the School of Health Sciences visited Daegu Catholic University from August 17 to 20. During the four-day visit, they participated in the “International Special Practicum in Occupational Health” and “Occupational Health English”.

The program which aims to promote academic exchange among students, included presentations on the participants' departments and research activities, as well as tours of university facilities. The group also visited POSCO, the largest steel manufacturer in Korea, where they exchanged information on the activities of occupational health professionals. In addition, the students actively interacted with one another through various cultural activities including traditional Korean games. The visit provided a valuable and rewarding opportunity for academic and cultural exchange between the two universities.
